Brett will be responsible for the development, implementation, and management of Dine Brands' investor relations strategy, with a focus on continuing and building relationships with investors, analysts and other key stakeholders.

Brett brings to the company his advisory and investing knowledge, amassed throughout a Wall Street career, which spans more than twenty-five years. Prior to joining Dine Brands, he served as a publishing restaurant industry analyst for Deutsche Bank, UBS, and MKM Partners, while gaining investing experience from his work within the hedge fund community. Brett received a degree in economics from Rutgers University.

Dine Brands CFO Vance Chang said, "I'm excited to welcome Brett to the Dine team. He brings with him deep industry knowledge and an investor-centric mindset that will be extremely valuable as we continue to create long-term shareholder value at Dine. We look forward to collaborating with him in building strong bonds with our investors, analysts, and other key stakeholders."
